Project Giant Robot was originally created for the Nintendo Game Boy Advance, and now is available on Android and iPad systems as well as numerous other platforms! Project Giant Robot v1.0 features online multiplayer, over a dozen games, music, even a text-to-speech feature that allows the player to hear their own voice in the game as well as another character's. GAMEPLAY: The objective of Project Giant Robot is to defeat the robot fighters. The game requires movement of the character using the left and right buttons on your device, and the A/B buttons to attack. Both the A and B button can be used for normal attacks, as well as to "grab" and pull in enemies that the player is attacking. The B button can also be pressed to activate a special attack that will take down a many enemies. You get a limited supply of these attacks based on the number of health you have at the start of the fight, so save your charges for when you need them! The A button is used to give your character free movement, which has the effect of allowing your character to jump over obstacles and into enemy attacks. Your character will automatically jump if you are close enough to enemies, but if you want to jump over an area of foes on your own then it's just a matter of using the right trigger to make sure you jump! If you press and hold the A button, you will perform a "double jump" where you jump 2 times in a row. The right trigger allows you to utilize a "grappling hook". This attack can only be used once per match. It is useful for pulling enemies out of the background and pulling them towards you, or to swing enemies right past obstacles. It is only active when the player is on the ground. The left trigger can be used to do both of the above, as well as to drop any objects that you are carrying. Use the left trigger to grab an enemy and pull them in, use it to drop an enemy, or use it to drop an object that you were holding. ATTACKS The A/B buttons on the controllers are used for attacks. Each character has several different attacks that can be used to deal damage to an enemy. Here's a breakdown of the different types of attacks and the damage they do: Normal Attacks: These attacks are the most common. They can be aimed in any direction with a simple flick c9d1549cdd

.helper.DefaultTheme') A: The problem was I had a dropdown menu with custom themes in it. I have change the location of the theme inside the custome themes base.tt which will point default theme. This invention relates to a telecommunication network architecture which includes a wireless network and to a system, method and apparatus for providing services related to the wireless network. The wireless network comprises a plurality of wireless transceivers communicating using a request-to-send/clear-to-send approach which enables a plurality of wireless transceivers to share a common down-conversion chain, a common up-conversion chain and a common antenna. Each of the wireless transceivers is assigned an interval for transmission on one of the shared components. This approach permits the sharing of circuits across multiple wireless transceivers and significantly increases the throughput of the networks. The apparatus, method and system for providing services related to the wireless network described herein can be broadly categorized as a peer-to-peer architecture in that it provides a new method for providing services over a wireless network system. The new methodology is based on network topology, rather than network distance for service delivery. The peer-to-peer approach adapts to the wireless communications link, rather than imposing the method on the wireless network architecture. The peer-to-peer approach, as applied to the present invention, is the operation of any peer within the wireless network when addressed by another wireless peer or network services element. The present invention employs a topology based approach for routing traffic within the wireless network. This approach adapts to the wireless communications link and does not impose a method on the wireless network. It uses routing tables to provide data flow routing based on the wireless communications link among wireless cells, base stations and wireless service providers. The base stations, wireless cells, wireless service providers and wireless transceivers form the wireless network of the present invention. The wireless network maintains state information to permit the routing of data packets within the wireless network. This state information includes a peer-to-peer relationship between the wireless transceivers and an identifier of the wireless transceiver's closest serving cell. The routing tables for routing data packets within the wireless network provide for peer-to-peer routing between requesting wireless transceivers and destination wireless transceivers. The routing tables and packet routing occur between wireless transceivers rather than each individual wireless transceiver having a routing table. As a result of this peer-to-peer approach

An unknown force is killing wealthy patrons in the ill-fated SpaceVenture, a new line of restaurants, on their way to the Galactic Planetary Elevator. Your mission is to escape from the Planet Poultrid, once it's night-time by day, and avoid being eaten by these cockroach-like creatures that can go through walls. Will your ship's sensors be able to detect the creatures? Features: - A new SpaceVenture-themed Aliens game - Original Audio - Five-nights-at-freddys style, METAL, sci-fi horror game - Classic, old-school game mechanics as found in some of the best legendary adventure games - Dogmatic Steve Dark, OSI's resident world-builder and with over 30 years of video games experience - Original art by Matt Riley (@mattcr2), the original artist for the SpaceQuest series and his current projects, World War 2 Skies! and John Maddock's Lost World(still in development, will have a public release in October 2016) - Original tunes made by SWAPnPOP UK and SWAPnPOP US! Planetary Architecture: The Poultrid is a mixture of both places and times. It's a mixture of a large block-like structure and an ever growing, growing, ever-growing ball of pure space dust. The space dust is constantly expanding and growing ever bigger. But, as a result of the expanding space dust, various strange things can happen. Space dust, like sand, can push back against objects and create thrust. But, in this case, the space dust is actually able to push out against the space dust, creating an expanding, but contracting, mass of space dust. The Poultrid is also sort of like a snowball, continuously picking up space dust and forming it into a larger snowball. Eventually, the snowball gets larger than the original seed of space dust. And so, the now snowball-like object, which is now a planet/ball of space dust, begins to travel further away from the star that originally spawned it. In the near future, when the Earth was first formed, the Earth was a small ball of space dust in deep space, which gradually grew, expanding as it gained in mass and more and more space dust was pushed onto it. Even after the Earth was formed, it was still covered in a blanket of space dust. It wasn't until the sun itself
