(AP) — Maryland lawmakers on Thursday are considering a bill that would require government workers and teachers to contribute to a pension plan similar to one already in place for state police officers and firefighters. Republican lawmakers say they're trying to save the state from a projected $750 million budget shortfall over the next three years. Supporters of the bill say it will help save money while boosting worker morale. "I just think that if we could incentivize our teachers to be good teachers, give them the same benefits and benefits that the state police have
